Love, cuddles and everyday life

By Mary Francen

We all live in the real world but at times wish that we didn't. If we didn't then we wouldn't be in the age/role play world now would we?

There is nothing wrong these feelings of wanting to be loved and cuddled or from the adult side of things wanting to love and cuddle and take care of someone else for a little while.

The problems that can arise when expectations aren't met can be mind blowing and heart shattering however for both big and little in these relationships.

In this article I would like to offer up some suggestions on how to deal with the unexpected when a situation arises where a once prospective play weekend turns into the mundane due to unexpected company of the non-play type.

This is not geared for those of you whom live together and can simply put off your play weekend till the day after the company leaves but more so for the the visiting relative who just happens upon a situation that is out of their control as well as your own.

With the holidays that have just recently passed we all know just how busy certain times of the year can get, and making time to be with your loved ones is something that we set time to do and it seems like the heavens have other plans for us at times.

Family dropping by unannounced, the kids who were at a friends for the night suddenly getting ill and returning home. The phone ringing non-stop during private moments, the car breaking down on your way to the restaurant to meet your special someone. These are all things that while they are normal events that happen all the time often seem to take on new meaning for us when we are already stressed out.

What makes the difference is how we handle those times especially those of us who are the grownups in these relationships. Because those of us who are the "kids" often times look to the "grownups" for a place to gain some comfort in.

So now that we have determined that your playtime has been turned into something that you had not planned it to be, let's discuss some things that you can do to make your visit still be a fun experience.

If there are several people present there is no reason that you can't play a game. Yes I know not something that one might think of doing with a group of people who aren't age or role players, but why not? Keep a game on hand that's a tad more on the grownup side of things such as say scrabble or even pictionary.

By playing the game your unexpected company will get to have a bit of fun and your planned on company and you will still get to know in each other's mind that you as a "family" would do, in other words play.

Go for a walk through the mall together, if you are an older "child" when you play going to the mall might be something that you would enjoy doing with your "play partner" anyway so why not take your unexpected company on a nice walk through the local mall with the two of you? Talking amongst yourselves at home or at the mall as you walk it doesn't really matter if you're doing that activity at home or while out getting a bit of exercise does it? Meanwhile that "teen or preteen" you is having a bit of fun along with your "parent".

Even everyday activities can be turned into play without anyone knowing and a subtle wink of your eye or a gentle hand squeeze goes a long way as a reminder if given at the proper moment during a slightly bratty comment or pouty look.

So before you give up completely take a good look around at the things that you have to do and that you can do to salvage the time that you do have and incorporate everyday into what you can to please both your planned guest as well as those unplanned for guests that showed up.

Has the Age Play lifestyle made mainstream news media?

By Mary Francen

The other day I was shown several articles on a news website where they talked about spanking and role play and how adding these to a sexual relationship will spice back into a romance and how this is what most woman crave and want.

Now I am not going to speak for the entire female population at large because I don't believe that anyone should speak on behalf of anyone else. But I can say that many of the people that I have ever had such intimate conversations with are in fact kinky in some way.

Does it mean that the things that the news is now reporting on Age/Role Play? I have seen many different versions of that same theme from it being on things such as TV shows like Dr. Phil to the Jerry Springer type shows down to peoples blogs and of course reputable news articles as well.

I am not so sure that what I have seen I would call honest to god reporting so much as people poking fun at something that they don't understand. People tend to talk the things that they don't understand in an odd way, some will ask questions and do research, and others will score.

What is it about doing things that relieve stress and bring about feelings of happiness that fascinate some people? Is it that roadside accident syndrome? The one that makes people rubberneck when they see that there has been a fender bender on the highway.

It seems as if Age/Role Play has become much more in the limelight since its appearance on TV shows such as CSI and the like. Famous scenes where they found the wealthy and powerful man in Vegas dead and then found his playroom complete with a playpen and all the fixings, the looks on the "seasoned investigators" faces was almost beyond priceless even for me who is a very young Age-Player.

Has the ability to find many more "childlike fashions and accessories" in ladies sizes in stores such as Wall-Mart and Target made it more acceptable to be "Young at heart"?

If the answer is no to the questions that I have posed in my article then why is it that the entertainment industry, the fashion industry and advertisers/retailers all seeming to be so excepting of our kink so long as our pocketbooks/wallets and eyes are open?

Uncle Radio Redux

By Stephen Richard

In several previous issues we have talked about listening to children's music over the internet in what has been called "Uncle Radio"

The songs played through Uncle Radio are from the following categories:

1. Cartoon Themes
2. Childrens Favorite Songs Vol 1
3. Various Childrens Songs
4. Disney Movies
- 5 Luluby Favorites
6. Robo Tech
7. School House Rock

In an effort to allow more use of "Uncle Radio" and the ability to add it to search engines we have made a slight change to the way of accessing Uncle Radio.

You can now access it view <http://www.uncleradio.ageplaygroup.com> this will allow you view the website for the site you can see what is playing and what has played as well as accessing Uncle Radio, which can now be played view Windows Media player and Winamp alike.

To access the music via either player simply choose the play URL option and put in the address of <http://www.uncleradio.ageplaygroup.com:1241>

When is love just not enough anymore?

By Mary Francen

When do you give up on a relationship in the age-play world? We have talked a lot about communication and the importance of boundaries and respect in the issues that have already been published.

Well what do you do when you have tried all of the advice that we have given and even some advice from others or your own ideas and still you feel that your needs aren't being met any longer or worse yet. You're being mistreated through lack of respect.

Then it is time to go your separate ways before resentment builds on both of your parts and what follows resentment hatred.

Sometimes relationships go through a cycle and that cycle comes to an end. Beating on a horse when its dead isn't going to bring it back to life and when you have tried every tool in that relationship tool box and still things are the same or have gotten worse then it is time to step back and say ok this is not working and its time to stop now.

I know this article seems a bit odd to have in our Feb. issue with it being the month of love and all. However Feb. isn't all about hearts and flowers. It is about relationships and as such this article has particular meaning for this issue.

It is often the case where one person in the relationship will think that there isn't truly a problem or that they will not see the problems as so awful as the other person does. This doesn't mean that the person who is on the end of seeing the real problems in the relationship should back down from their stance.

Just because someone says that they will do something or that they learn from their mistakes or that things will be better etc. if you haven't seen the proof of their words in your previous talks with them, then you aren't going to now. That old saying about the proof is in the pudding is true and someone who is wanting to make things work truly from deep within their heart of hearts will be doing the things that they tell you from the start of your talks, not the ending talk.

Now how do you deal with the face off? This is the hardest one of all and one I will admit that I am not good with at all. But you have got to be honest and no holds bar when it comes to telling the person the things that are bothering you and the things that caused the final set apart. I find myself in a position where I am not able to hurt someone especially someone I was in a relationship with because I loved them. A double whammy for me because I don't hurt people on a normal basis adds the love factor and I am a puffball.

This is a very negative feature to have because it allows people to run over you in situations that are not good for you as a person. Generally a good rule of thumb to have is the old saying of fool me once shame on you, fool me twice shame on me. Simply put if you hurt me once and it's an honest mistake then ok we work it out if you hurt me twice then that's a problem.

Now I am not talking about the normal things that happen in everyday life where we all make each other angry. I am talking about honest to goodness hurts here. The kind of things that usually will only happen every great once in a while with a good relationship and with proper communication, respect and understanding on both ends in a relationship they shouldn't be a problem at all.

However if you are finding that the person who has done the hurts isn't doing anything that they said that they would do during those talks then no matter how much you do not want to do it, you need to walk away. It's for the best for both of you because if you don't then you are only being co-dependant.

Being co-dependant with someone who doesn't want to be a healthy part of your life is only going to cause you long term heartache and pain. It will also cause you when do finally walk away or the other person walks away from you to carry forth baggage into your next relationship.

So it really is very important that you stick to the agreed upon things that the two of you have already talked about. Relationships are just like raising bio kids they take communication, caring, love, nurturing and follow through on both ends. This is not just exclusive to a husband/wife situation but it transends to every type of relationship in your life in a similar way.

While you may not love your boss you do have to respect them and the boundaries set forth by who ever they are. Well the same goes for every single relationship in your life and on both ends of it.

If you are not getting or giving all of the required pieces to a relationship then you both need to either step up to the plate or get off the field all together.

Harsh words yes but truth sometimes must hurt and it is always better then a lie.

You will both heal in time and who knows what the future holds but in the here and now present the fact remains that the two of you are unable to stay together any longer because you weren't able to use the tools to making it work. That happens it doesn't mean that either of you is a bad person or that either of you is one hundred percent wrong.

It is easy to put the blame on the other person when things go wrong, but that doesn't solve anything in the end. The main thing to focus on now is moving forward towards a healthier and happier you and when I say you I mean the both of you even if that means that you are no longer together.

And sometimes it means loving someone enough to say I need to say goodbye so that you can be all that I know you are capable of being.

But remember everyone before you get to this point you have to use all the tools it takes to make a relationship work because love is truly worth the work it takes to be happy.

A new year brings Many new ponderings by this writer

By Mary Francen

This months editorial is a combination of many thoughts. First I would like to thank our readers for your patients with the problems that have plagued the last two issues.

While we attempted to update our computer systems we found out that Vista doesn't like our main software that we use to put together the APT. However we have fixed that problem and begun anew along with the New Year.

I would also like to mention some exciting news. The Age-Play Times has two new writers on our staff and we would like to welcome them both to the play ground that is our staff.

The two of them will both bring their own experiences and fresh look into the world of fun and Age/Role-Play and the APT hopes that you our readers will enjoy there pieces as much as they did in brining you them.

Now I would like to discuss something that happened the other day that has some baring for our readers.

We had some unexpected work done at the house and while I expected the workmen to be looking around the house I didn't expect them to go searching throughout the ENTIRE house.

This search of there's included my bedroom closets and moving furniture and even going into cabinets as they searched out leaking air spots in our home.

Now as most of our readers are aware by now, I live at home as a 24/7 little girl. While this does not mean that I am not a grownup and do not have grownup things that I have to do. What it does mean is that I have a little girls bedroom decorated in my favorite theme.

Normally I am not bothered one bit by anyone seeing my bedroom, because I put away anything that I deeply do not wish to be seen such as my most favorite of little girl items.

Well needless to say when these workmen showed up several hours early and only fifteen minutes after I had opened my eyes in the morning and I had known that I wouldn't have the time or the access to using the kitchen I had a nasty choice to make. Hide my possessions or eat breakfast out and get home and get things put up before they arrived.

Well I ran to the nearest Duncan Donuts and got home just three minutes before they arrived here. Needless to say I wasn't able to put up my most cherished of little girl items before the workmen arrived and headed straight up the steps to my bedroom.

My mortification for some reason was at an all time high when this happened and I had no idea how to handle this. Here I had two strange men in my home and they now knew ALL of my secrets. LOL

The next thing I knew they were tearing apart my closets and moving about furniture, there was nothing that these two men didn't find out, and here I spent the entire day with them.

The best part of this little experience was the fact that the man was one of those people who just oozes the "Daddyish" about him in his every action and words as he spoke both to me and also to his partner.

So how does someone in my position actually deal with this. Well the only way that I could. I told them how sorry I was that things weren't as neat as I would have wanted them to be. LOL For this I was told I was obsessive by the "Daddyish" man.

So how do you go about living the way you have chosen to with your partner or even alone you might be wondering?

Well that one was not so easy to figure out for me I, "Miss open about who and what she is" I couldn't wait for those two men to get out of my home. LOL But it did teach me one lesson.

You can't prepare for everything or hide every part of who you are. Because even when you do it will come out in a most unexpected way.

This doesn't mean that you have to flaunt every little secret that you have, lord knows that I don't. But being honest with yourself and those closest to your heart with whom you trust is key.

That little funny tail of being caught with my blanky in hand by a non aper brings me to my next set of thoughts for this issue.

Love is something that draws everyone together its one of the key components that make every "family" come together because its one of the things that we all as people crave. "Bigs" crave giving that nurturing caring and loving to "littles" and "littles" crave giving it back and receiving the nurturing care.

During this month when love is abound and all around us remember to not only say the words "I love you" but to show them as well. And on a final note from the entire staff of the APT to all of our readers we wish you all a very happy Valentines Day.

The exploration of sissy ageplay

Ageplay, such a wonderful term. gives you the impression this lifestyle is short sweet and to the point. As if its encapsulated in a shiny plastic jewelled box and ready for sale at Barney's. However if you think that is truly the case, I have this bridge in Brooklyn I can let you have for pennies on the dollar.

Ageplay can be a lifestyle, fetish, proclivity, catharsis, sexy, fairly non-toxic (depending on where you get your supplies) totally non-offending style of living. It is no better than the lifestyle of an 18hour-a-day corporate salaryman and no worse than the 24hour-a-day lifestyle of a busy soccer mom. It is simply what it is, a difference in living from the generally proscribed lifestyle that we are all told at one time or another is normal.

Hello. By way of introduction, my name is Alyssa DeWinter. I'm 33, I'm a transsexual and female, and though I have had plenty of periphery connection to various fetishes and lifestyles, I am now at the precipice of the rabbit hole of Ageplay. Though I am by no means a professional psychologist or scientist, I have an inquisitive mind and desire to approach this lifestyle area and dive in somewhere for our mutual enlightenment and no doubt fun :)

I've talked with many people over the past two years as to their interest in and motivations for ageplay and they've given me alot of reasons for it and alot of variations to explore. The thing I have taken away and been able to codify is that Ageplay isn't a box, its not a label, its a pervasive meme (a cultural item that is transmitted by repetition in a manner analogous to the biological transmission of genes.) playing itself out in a myriad of ways. There is no possibility of placing Ageplay itself under a microscope to be properly analyzed, coded and stored for reference. There are no hard and fast rules of Ageplay, more a loose set of evolving guidelines in many ways borrowed from other communities. Ironically that means that Ageplay is the cutting edge of the sense of learning what it is to be itself and as an Ageplayer it must then follow that anyone entering into its various subsets is doing so out of a sense of learning about oneself.

The only item in Ageplay that I may point to at the inset, is that a recurring set of Common Sense guidelines do exist, such that its made clear that Ageplay does not involve actual children of any kind; that All Activity is consensual whether it be by one self or with others; and finally that its reason d'etre is that of an adult playing or enabling the play of another in the role of a child between the ages of 0 to 17. Anything beyond these three guidelines is a further variation, a subset if you will, of the overall meme. However those subsets can be studied and over time accepted as rote. At this stage however, Ageplay as meme, has no rules, just guidelines.

As to your particular subset of the Ageplay meme questions do come up and need to be answered. Is sex in or out in Ageplay? Is wearing a diaper necessary? or a Bib? Is Bondage allowed? Humiliation? Discipline?

Although no one definitely knows, everyone has an opinion and therefore a specific flavor that should come with a 'Mileage May Vary' bumpersticker. Truth to tell in the study of Ageplay, we are stuck with the age old philosophy of Socrates, that simply paraphrased, goes something like this, "True knowledge exists in knowing that you know nothing".

And So I accept that on Ageplay overall I know (can quantify document and point to specific overarching rules of governance) nothing... though I do suspect quite a bit. This is where I've been asked to come in, to map the genomic meme, not of ageplay overall but of a subset of ageplay with a subjective point of view with which I hope to share with you, the reader. Of course, I would be remiss if I didn't point out that since there is no hard and fast rule system, caste system, etcetera, that I am far more likely to succumb to the almighty Heisenberg Uncertainty Principle, thereby changing the nature of that which is observed.

I am however quite comfortable with that. So now that our precepts are firmly established, and basic tenets in place, lets continue on to the subset of which I will take on and share, That of the "Sissy".

There are many who have a preconceived notion today of what a sissy is. Some use it as a pejorative statement "that person is a sissy" and it can be commonly misconstrued to have an affiliation with someone who is clearly gay. And while that may be a term which is certainly identifiable as terms change over time. It is not, by any means, the only possible interpretation or defining characteristic. In fact, the term Sissy goes back quite a ways and has literally and figuratively nothing to do with being gay, straight, lesbian, transgendered or intersexed whatsoever.

Sissy is a term of affectation formed from the word sister. Its usually ascribed to (and I should mention at odds with a general understanding of the term as it is tossed around in society today) to the "eldest" female child of a family unit. It may also be ascribed to girls who have a close relationship to someone who is not technically blood related and, for some girls, the word Sissy is so oft used that it can supercede their given name. With this kind of versatility, one is assured that being a Sissy, it isn't necessary to comply with what is generally imagined from the vox populi. "Sissy's" etymology is quite interesting and as a nod to the term's own versatility, it has also has contributed in the 1900's to the term 'prissy' (a combination of the words prim and sissy) joining our lexicon.

So "Sissy" encompasses something quite nice really. To me it steps of matronly authority superceded only by the actual or supposed mother figure. Sissy becomes Mother-in-Training which can also translate to 'head of the lower household' or in layman's terms, 'Big Sister'.

Contrast this term with the feminist "Girly Girl" and this is where things get interesting. A 'Girly Girl' is essentially an affectation ascribed to women who almost as a reaction to the second wave of feminism in the 60s and 70s molded themselves into a role of what might be considered a fair stereotype of what many consider a girl should be, what she should wear and what should she do.

The basic foundational tenets are that 'Girly Girls' choose to behave and dress in a traditionally feminine style (think Flower dresses vis-a-vis Laura Ashley, always manicured/pedicured, and taking up gossip and relationship-speak over the forms of feminism at large in the modern world. 'Girly Girl' is also used, both nicely and as pejorative, by some feminists and less traditionally-minded women for their more traditionally-minded sisters.

By looking at these two representations of femininity and realizing that they are both used and considered pretty much interchangeable, we come to an interpretation of what a Sissy or Girly Girl is and it is quite different than the readily available diminutive.

So, the question becomes, armed with the above knowledge and mixed with a little intuition, how do I see myself as a Sissy? and how does this play into Ageplay?

Well the key component I think to qualify as ageplay is playing the role or representing the part of a person somewhere between baby and young adult. So we will simply accept this as a given.

Accepting that, it then allows me to make some decisions. Do I wish to Ageplay an older child or a younger one... what am I comfortable with? Lets go with something different than my day to day experience as a female in this society and say 12 or below. This gives me the range to wear diapers if I like.. and I do like :)

Further, lets then question the why. Why do this? Like some others who get into ageplay, I choose to for catharsis, the letting go, and return to play, I know I missed something in my childhood. I wasn't allowed to have that time the way I wanted or imagined, so I am calling this a do-over :)

Moreover, there can be no question I am an adult outside of play and therefore I'm very happy not lipping, typing in kidspeak or mincing about as if I don't know what I'm doing. The fact is, I do and though others may wish to put this aside as is their right, I see no reason to, so I simply won't.

Now that the take-with-me's are relatively done, It would be incomplete if I did not leave things of the adult world behind and make replacements. So, goodbye ultra-modern fashion and leathers and hello Laura Ashley, Satin, Silk, Frills, Lace and Mary Janes. Goodbye panties, Hello Diapers, Bonnets, and Binkies :) Goodbye modern music, Hello Synth, Classical, and baby music. Hello spankings, we meet again my old friend :) And hello discovery of masturbation and sex of a more innocent time.

So as a Sissy who am I? I'm me, just younger, more centered, filled with wonder and the things ahead. I'm wearing the flowers and frills that I should have, Listening to the music I wanted and acting the way I wanted if only I had been allowed. I'm a brat, I'm a Good girl and bad girl when no one's looking. I can be a sneak, I can be brazen. I give myself the opportunity to experience not for reason but for the fun of it without societal attachment telling me no.

And if you've come this far, then chances are well that you can too, if you let go and embrace your Sissy.

The trip of a life-time

By Mary Francen

She packed her bags and dreamed about what was to come. What would it really be like she pondered as she placed the last of the things that she held so secretly in her deepest part of her closet into the ordinary looking black suitcase.

Closing it and starting out of the room that she was so used to and giving it one last look she wondered once again just what this trip would bring her to?

Sure she thought to her self as she glanced around the room that to anyone else who had been to her small home it appeared as if she was a well put together smart business woman who liked textures in her décor. To her, however the room had constant little reminders all around her of the things that she loved so deeply.

The cab took her to the airport while her mind ran through all of the things that she had been told would happen in the coming days. A smile sat on her face even though drivers and passengers in vehicles around her sitting in the evening traffic were moody and it showed in their driving and their faces.

But Salena didn't pay them any mind her thoughts were much farther away then the red lights of the stream of cars that usually stood in this intersection at rush hour.

She was quickly brought back to reality when the cabby announced her fair and pushed for her to hurry on getting out of the cab without even offering a hand with her bags. Normally she might have been quit annoyed by the mans rude behavior however today she didn't pay him any mind as she fumbled with her bags and the trip across the lane after paying him.

As she stood in the long lines awaiting her turn at various points throughout the airport again her mind dreamt of the many events that were to happen soon enough

For once that plane landed she would no longer be Salena the smart independent woman who take care of everyone else. Instead she would be the one whom was cared for.

At last... Salena thought as she sank into the seat on the plane and shut the shade to the window. She didn't much care if the person who would be sitting next to her in first class wished to look out the window she did not like the sights that one would see when they looked out during take off or landing. Not that she enjoyed being above the clouds at all come to think of it she almost laughed out loud to her self just as a very well dressed businessman sat down next to her.

Salena always paid close attention to those around her she never knew when that information might come in handy and she noticed that this man carried an old fashioned hard cased briefcase with him only and was dressed with such preciseness it was extremely impressive to her.

She also noticed that he had looked at her as well to see who was sitting next to him most likely Salena imagined as she opened up her laptop and started typing on it She had some things to do before the plane landed.

This was the first time that she had ever been ordered to do things by someone else and had actually done them outside of her safety zone of her home and it was starting to show as the plane started to pass its half way mark on the long trip.

First class had its privileges she thought as she sent off the required email detailing what she was wearing and that she had made the plane on time, as well as her scheduled arrival time. She noticed a few minutes later that the man sitting next to her seemed to become much happier then he had been on the first half of the trip. Perhaps he to is a bit shy when it comes to plane rides she mused as she began to type up a report for work.

Are you thirsty? Salena almost jumped out of her skin when she was touched out of her intense concentration. It was the gentleman sitting next to her. Miss would you like something to drink? He again asked her.

Oh pardon me I seem to have gotten completely involved in my work. Salena stumbled out as she gave the man a shaky smile. Yes that would be lovely. My name is Salena. She offered him her hand along with the smile.

My name is George, A pleasure Miss. George took her hand and kissed it which caused Salena to blush deeply as he took the offered glass of wine from the steward and handed it to her. Your drink Miss, however I wouldn't suggest drinking to many of those while flying.

Salena was stunned at his gentle nature and sweet gesture of the hand kiss as he handed her the wine and didn't give her normal response to him when he attempted to tell her not to drink. "Thank you George, no you're right of course drinking at high altitudes is never a very good idea. However this particular trip of mine is a once in a life time trip for me so I think I shall indulge just this once."

"How about you George are you traveling for business or is this a pleasure trip for you?" Salena was a bit more then curious as she asked she was secretly hoping that the man wasn't merely returning home from some tedious business trip.

"I am also on a pleasure trip, I live in the city but am on my way to see my daughter. Whom are you going to see Miss?" George looked at her with his ice blue eyes that seemed to have a life of their own as his gaze looked right through her while he asked a simple question. Salena wondered what the man did for a living that he possessed that ability. Perhaps she mused it was because he was a parent and most parents acquired that ability when dealing with their offspring.

"I am on my way to a lovely bed and breakfast for a vacation of a life time. And really you do not need to be so formal as to call me Miss George, Salena will do." She smiled at him as her nerves were starting to fray even more as the pilot announced that they were starting to descend and would the passengers please put away their belongings.

George put up his own laptop and the briefcase he kept it in and offered his assistance with her things, such a gentlemen she thought. "Thank you George."

The truth be told she didn't wish to actually have to stand up in front of him right now to put it in the overhead bins and was glad for his assistance.

Salena leaned back deeply into her chair and closed her eyes tightly as soon as her belongings were put up, she hated flying telling herself that soon they would be on the ground she tried to think of the wonderful weekend away that she was about to have.

"Young lady didn't you hear the Captain? Put your seatbelt on." Salena nearly jumped out of her skin as she heard the male voice in her ear speak so firmly to her. Jumping forward in her chair in reaction to being drawn out of her own deep thoughts by George Salena turned with a deep blush on her face as she fumbled with the seatbelt.

"Oh yes I of course." Salena stumbled over her words as she looked at George in the face his facial features no longer the happy soft features she had seen earlier now they were a bit harder and his grey eyes with the tint of ocean blue in them held a sparkle of fire as he looked directly at her.

Quickly Salena let her gaze drift back to the seat in front of her as she suddenly felt very self conscious and nervous, extremely aware of the preparation work that she had done for this trip as well as the several hours on the plane itself all mingling together with Georges stare.

Just then the plane started to make its final approach and decent into the airport, the fast decent was making Salena's stomach do the flip flops she was suddenly rethinking the wine she had earlier as her hands gripped the chairs arm tightly.

"It will be alright, soon the flight will be over with and the fun can begin pumpkin." Georges voice again whispered in Salena's ear this time it was soft and reassuring the firm overtone that it held just moments ago was gone and she felt his hand touch hers and lift it from the arm rest and hold it.

Before she could say anything or dared to open her eyes the plane bounced a little and she felt it skid to its stop and slowly make its way to the door of the airport. Then and only then did she dare open her eyes.

She was suddenly in a very big hurry to get off the plane and away from George as she realized that she hadn't been able to hold out any longer during the landing process. And she waited for him to stand so that she could get her bags and hurry past but he hadn't let go of her hand yet. That is when she remembered exactly what he had said to her ending his statement with the word pumpkin.

Once the other people from first class had gotten their belongings it was then that George stood and gathered his bag and hers as well and spoke to a stunned Salena. "Let me carry your bags for you." Holding his hand out to her just as a gentleman would, he waited for her to take it to assist her in standing from her seat.

Salena found her voice at that point but kept her gaze away from his face and those eyes that seemed to be able to read her thoughts or so she thought. "Oh that is very sweet of you however, you are meeting your daughter and someone will be at the gate to meet me from the bed and breakfast where I am meeting someone special as well." She smiled as she said the words despite her nerves just the thought of seeing her "Daddy" and being in his care at an age-play bed and breakfast instead of the world of cyberspace just made her grin from ear to ear.

George leaned down and took her hand in his and with a slightly firm tone to his voice and a smile on his face replied to her, his eyes giving away the joy that the tone to his voice was trying to show. "I have met my daughter and you Miss have met your special someone, now let's not keep the car service waiting any longer pumpkin."

Salena in stunned silence let George take her hand as the pumpkin and his smile that followed it ran through her mind, she was in a haze as he led her off the plane and towards the baggage area for a moment Salena paused by the ladies room until George tugged on her hand. "We will take care of that in the car pumpkin, Daddy knows that you need changing, but we need to meet the driver downstairs first."

Salena pouted but she hadn't realized it but George did and he smiled to himself thinking that it was a good thing that she was starting to get into her role so quickly and easily as he reached the bottom of the escalator with her. "Alright Salena you need to make a few calls as does Daddy I will finish getting our bags while you make your calls, do not stray from where Daddy can see you young lady. I will be right here at this carousel." With that he pointed to the one with the large number eight overhead.

Salena stood off to the side a bit but with-in Georges line of sight and took her cell out of her pocket book and made the three calls that she needed to make while she talked she thought over the emails and chat times and how if she hadn't been so preoccupied she would have seen this coming and her mind relaxed a bit more as she George finished up with his calls and approached her with their bags in tow.

"So pumpkin are you ready to go and have fun at the vacation house?" George spoke to her with a gentle tone to his voice while he smiled at her as people rushed past them on their way to there various destinations.

Nodding her head Salena smiled once she walked out the door of the baggage claim area she was no longer Salena Adams a 44 year old business woman she would instantly become Sally Jones a 4 year old. Just as she had pre-arranged with him over the various conversations they had over the computer.

Salena's excitement grew as she thought about the weekend and the stress free time of no business to worry about, not even having to worry about when to decide to go to bed or when to have lunch.

Her worries and stresses left behind as she gave them up to him to worry about for just the weekend. She started for the door in front of him at a hurried pace and reached the doorway before him. Salena wasn't prepared for it when it first happened, she felt a hand grab her arm the moment she stepped out of the door. "Sally! Wait for me, no running off young lady!" at the same exact time as the words and hand grabbed her arm another connected with her bottom sharply.

George wasn't too surprised by her reaction to the question he posed to her about leaving the airport, it was her first real life encounter after all he thought but his thoughts were quickly taken away as she reached the door and didn't stop. Stepping very quickly back into his role as Daddy George did what was needed at the time he knew that her brain was on an emotional high right now it was one of the reasons that he had set things up the way he had for the planes to and from the B&B.

"Mr. Jones? Sally?" A man approached the two of them before George or Salena could speak again. He held a sign in his hand which bore the name Jones on it and was wearing a limo drivers uniform.

"Yes I am Mr. Jones and this is my daughter. You must be from the B&B?" George had been their in the past and recognized the specialty colored limousine that was parked at the curb waiting for them.

"OOOO prettyyyy!!" Salena's eyes were drawn immediately to the car with its special paint job which faded from a purple to blue to pink and back to purple and had a pearl over tone as a top coat. Without even thinking she pulled free of George and ran towards it and ran her hand along the paints surface while the two men exchanged the bags.

George smiled while he kept an eye on her he knew the car was painted in that fashion for a reason. It was done up in that fashion to bring out the childlike reaction in the B&B's clients who were little ones while still not drawing to much attention by having a build board on it advertising the type of B&B that it was.

"Come along now Sally you may look at the pretty car when we get to the vacation house now its time to go for a car ride." George had walked up to her and taken her hand off the car and walked towards the open door where the driver stood and helped her into the car.

(Tune in next issue to read about the rest of the adventures between Salena and Georgeand please remember that this is a purply fictional piece and that you should always follow the safety protocols when you meet someone for the first time keep it safe sane and consensual.)

Fun comes in many forms here are but a few

By Mary Francen

The word search puzzle directly to the right of this column is done of course for the APT. So the words that you would be looking for are all related to in some way or another to the "kink world".

If you would like to print the puzzle out so that you can do it with a crayon "pen" or my personal favorite a colored pen or marker. Follow these directions.

1. if you know how to do a screen shot using paint shop pro you can easily do that for just the puzzle and words and save yourself some ink.
2. However if you do not know how to do a screen shot or have access to paint shop pro you may hit print in adobe.
3. Stop! before you hit the enter key or click ok check the pop-up box to make sure you see a drop down menu that reads something along the lines of. "Shrink to printable area."
4. This is what you want to be showing, it will shrink the entire page for you, now you can either hit the enter key or click ok and it will print out for you.

Toys, comics and action figures not just for the young anymore

By Pamela Leland

Looking for something fun to do that relatively inexpensive? There are a number of toy, collectible and comic book shows around that can help bring back fond childhood memories of those bygone days.

A treasured toy, long gone might show up or a favorite title of the past could spark some new interest.

A recent collectible show I went to featured a number of action figures and tin toys. Tin toys came out in the late 40s up to the early 60s and there is a special market for collectibles. The main companies that manufactured these metal robots, soldiers, tanks, trucks and ray guns were from New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

GI Joe is on the rise. The original 12-inch doll figures could be found complete with life like hair and karate action grip along with the action figures based on the 1980s cartoon and the comic book. Excitement is building surrounding a film that will be based on the original cartoon fueled by a new comic book version of the anti-terrorist unit. New "classic" figures of this line are out in stores now.

In the spring I learned of a miniature soldiers show devoted to just historical soldiers and figurines and GI Joe action figures. That show will be held in Cherry Hill New Jersey. which made many popular toys in the 1960s. Captain Action also got the re-tread treatment with recreations of that line which had the super agent impersonate a variety of popular super heroes from DC and Marvel comics plus comic strip characters such as Flash Gordon and radio stars like the Green Hornet and the Lone Ranger.

One dealer had a supply of comics on hand as those who love action figures often enjoy the comics that many of them are based on.

Many of those present were in their 30s and 40s making me think that this was as much a gathering of those loving nostalgia as much as those seeking out a collectible item.

But then who said only young people can collect or play with toys.

Anyone can enjoy a toy/collectable show for some inexpensive fun

Other favorites at the show were Captain Action made from a company called Ideal

Words and the effects that they have in the AP/Role-Play world

By Mary Francen

Stupid such a small little word yet one with so much power to its six tiny letters, the power that word holds over some or for some when its said to others is amazing to a casual observer.

Have you ever watched closely how someone takes the news of being called stupid? Even in its various forms of the many languages on this planet the effects are still the same.

Some get angry; some get quiet and pull within themselves in an act of self preservation. And others attempt to show that they haven't heard the person's personal attack upon them.

Is it truly possible that a small little word can do life long damage to someone?

The answer is both yes and no, it would depend upon the persons involved and how the "S" word was applied and how often for damage to even happen. At some point in everyone's life they are going to be on the receiving end of that awful word.

Now I am sure that you are all wondering just how does this childish little word or others that are hurtful affect the world in which this paper has bearing?

The answer lies within the human psyche itself. Because we are all hardwired to receive certain things from our lifetime experiences lets say for instance if you had a wonderful and loving childhood then you are most likely going to be that type of "bio" person in return.

However if you hadn't received ANY type of encouragement, love nor attention from anyone at all as a biological child then you would most likely grow to become a very introverted and disparaging adult for lack of positive experiences in your life.

Most of us lead a mix of the two worlds that I just mentioned in our biological childhoods, and as such it tempers our experiences which our psyche's draw on when we deal with people and situations.

So if the pendulum for the negative has swung even slightly to the left side when it comes to the "S" word or any other negative word during your bio childhood or even a relationship in your adult life that has significant meaning to you. Then it is going to have a dramatic affect on your personality as a whole.

As kids who are notoriously "mean" to each other we all have heard something we didn't wish to or even said it at one time or another. If you have entered a real time chat room you may have witnessed a scene in which two "littles" were playing and saying things to each other that weren't nice.

They were simply playing as normal children would play but that same play while not bothersome to them, can be very hurtful to others in that same chat room. Again it all depends on each individual lifelong experience with the negative side of the swinging pendulum.

This can create a major problem for those who moderate those live chat rooms and even those own or moderate forum boards.

So how do you deal with your own negative swinging pendulum side effects while you're "little" is playing in a public place?

Well for starters you need to start to deal with those side effects when you're not playing. A very good piece of advice was given to the author of this piece a couple of weeks ago and I shall pass it along here.

"Remember that what <insert whom ever you wish here> said to you then doesn't apply now. And by you feeling or saying and in any way believing what <again insert whomever here> said to you is only you allowing them to continue to hurt you and to win. You also need to look at yourself in the mirror everyday and tell yourself out loud. I am beautiful both inside and out."

Now that piece of advice was given to myself personally in regards to the word that this article was referring to the "S" word, however if you read it closely enough and your negative pendulum side effects are getting in the way of your "public playtime fun" then they do apply to you.

Each and every one of us on this planet is beautiful both inside and out and we are each unique and that makes us special people. So tell yourself that each day, I realize that it sounds very silly to talk out loud to yourself in a mirror but the looking at yourself as you do this is part of undoing what you were for all purposes trained to believe.

Soon you will see that your "public playtime" will not be as strained when other "littles" are just being "littles" and doing what comes naturally to them. Remember that everyone's idea of play is just that there own idea. And while it may not be your own idea of fun it don't mean that you have to let there ideas ruin your own "playtime fun".

What??? No panties but but I gota wear panties!!?? Don't I?

For this issue of the punishment corner the punishment is one that's done through the kink world. And for some it would not even be a punishment at all its simply a lifestyle choice. However keep in mind that even a lifestyle choice can be turned into a punishment.

What is the one thing that you can do while going about your everyday life and still be extremely aware of being on punishment? Now I am sure that to each of us there are a few things that come to mind when you think of the answer to that question. But I am talking about the one thing that we do each morning as soon as we get up to get dressed.

That's right you put your panties on, well if your grownup tells you no you can't put them on today because you were naughty and I want you to think about that when your out doing the things that you need to do today. Then of course your going to feel that particular punishment all day long each time you go outside, each time you go to the potty and go to pull up your pants. And of course each time you simply sit down on a chair or the couch.

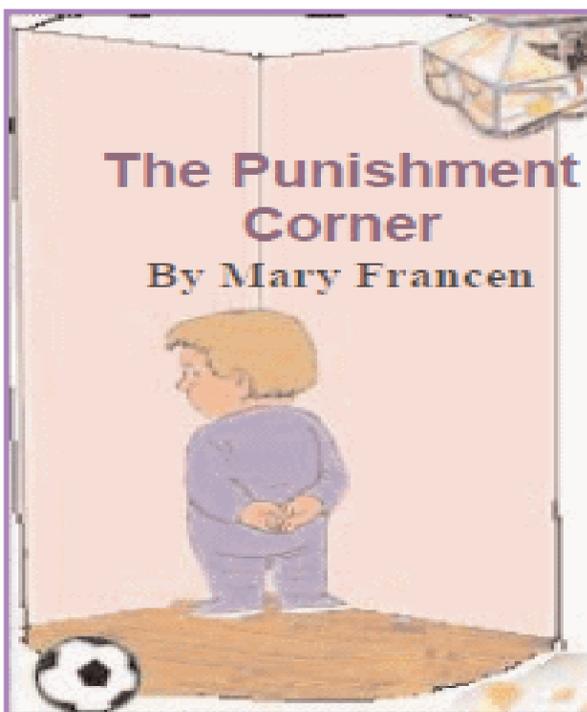

Your automatic reaction is to pull up your panties first, however for the amount of time that your not allowed to wear them your going to be reminded of what ever it is that you did to get in trouble in the first place.

Now for your grownups reading this column this punishment has other little add on's that can be used as well . Think of this, imagine getting a spanking im not talking about one of those that just goes poof in a few minutes but one of those that you feel all day long every time you sit or wiggle around.

Now add to that a pair of itchy wool pants or some other type of fabric thats not so comfy on a freshly spanked bottom and you will have one itchy uncomfortable little one who will most defiantly be feeling their punishment all day long with no relief from it until you grant it.

Now on the flip side of this punishment is the embarrassment factor which, yeah I know you grownups like to use against us "little ones" when you punish at times. However for us we hate it.

Even if you know that nobody else is aware of your punishment while your at the food store or at work, you THINK that the entire world does. So it has the added touch of "oh god does he/she know?" each time someone glances at you.

There are many people who don't even like to wear panties however there is a big difference in that being your own choice to wear or not to wear and it being a decision from someone else.

Especially if you are someone who has an especially hard time giving up that control over to another person even though you love them very much. There are simply put many reasons and many personality traits in people that make it very difficult for some to fully give up the fight.

Even when going to bed at night, especially if you are someone who doesn't normally wear panties to bed, that night that you are not allowed to wear them it will feel different because that choice is no longer an option of yours to make.

This little add-on makes you feel as if you are very much a child because you are having to be told what to wear to bed at night again.

If your staying home or once you are home for the day another add-on to the no panty rule could be to have to wash the windows.

Now this sounds kind of odd but if you think about it the entire world that is driving, walking etc. by your house can look at you while your washing the windows. So again it brings up that embarrassment factor to the punishment. The "Oh my god can they tell im being punished? Do they know that I am not wearing any panties?"

You could also add a plug to the window washing add-on, this creates even more embaessment and the uncomfortable feel in the bottom and if you have given a spanking prior or while the plug is in it will really be a punishment that the naughty little one in question will not soon forget.

Sitting while doing an assignment with no panties on is another favorite of some grownups as well. Either before a spanking or just after to reflect upon both the spanking and the naughty action that earned the spanking.

This can also have its own add-ons to it such as a rough door mat added to the chair to increase the reminder or a bath mat that had those massaging little raised "feelers" on it.

Those items while no one else who ever saw them in your home would think anything of them would always be a constant reminder to your little one of what happens to one who does what ever it was that had earned them said punishment.

Even a wicker chair or one of those new resin wicker chairs makes a great item to be an add-on to the no panty punishment while doing some sort of essay or lines. Again no one is going to ever think anything when they see the chair in your home if you toss a pillow on top of it for normal use.

Building it up to a mild sting: Play Spanking

By Stephen Richard

If a paddling were reviewed like a movie, it might go like this:

"Smashing, a high impact experience. Gets and holds your attention from the first moment. Really gets to the bottom of things. Will have you out of your seat from the first. Highly colored, with intense feeling. A sensation! Leaves you writhing in your chair. Compels the attention of all viewers. Experience this with your Significant Other." Of course the review would not be entirely positive: "Flat and wooden, can be a real pain in the butt. A punishing experience for some. Can build to an uncomfortable intensity. Will not be popular with the general public. Can leave you blue.. Not recommended for those under 18. You may want to leave in the middle."

This was something I had found long ago on the web and I wanted to use it as a way to talk about this next subject.

There is a key phrase in it that I want to pull out of it and use it to talk about this one method that I find does work. The Phrase is "Can build to an uncomfortable intensity"

What I am referring to is called a Build up spanking, the best way to describe this is to have you do a little experiment if you will as you are reading this I want you to start to clap your hands together. And I want you to keep clapping them until I tell you to stop. So start clapping.

In the movie called Dante's Peak the main character is talking to his colleagues about a recipe for disaster. He says if you put a frog in boiling water it will jump out. But if you put the frog in cold water then slowly heat it up it will stay there until it boils to death.

Yes not a pleasant thought at all I am sure and I am sure you are wondering why I even mention this in the first place.

Well let's think about it in the realms of spanking. If you were to start spanking very hard right away, then you would soon reach a point in which the person being spanked can no longer feel the spanking because the nerves have hit the overload point very fast. You would lucky you can get perhaps 5 minutes of spanking like this.

What if you wanted to do a longer spanking?

Then you use what a build up spanking. If you had been clapping as I had asked you to do you can now stop clapping.

The same feeling your hands now have of the heat and the tender pain just from doing can be applied to the bottom area of a sub/brat/adult child with the same feelings your hands are now having.

If you wanted to give a long drawn out spanking and wanted them to feel it but not have them go numb to the pain then you start it building up.

What this means is if you start to lightly swat a area say 5 or 6 times then move on to another area or eventually you will have the heat starting to rise and the sting will start to ride. Little by little with nothing more than a pat or a light-teasing swat you are bringing the pain up to their bottoms.

You could go an hour like this and would have the same amount of pain that they felt from a 5-minute full hard spanking.

You could paint their bottoms a dark red and have some nice heat all by just letting the pain from the spanking build up to a real intense feeling.

Try it next time on your little adult child's bottom. See if you can make the pain and heat and red build up. Yes it will take a bit but just give it a try you may find a way to give them a long drawn out spanking without making it a hard spanking.

This type of spanking can be a fun play time type of spanking when they haven't done anything to be punished for but the both of you want to just play around.

Yes they will feel it for a short time but it still is no where the amount they could or should feel for a real punishment spanking.

Building it up does take a considerable amount of time to do so if you are planning a real punishment spanking then this type would not be what you would want to even consider.

The reason being with punishment spankings the idea is to get them to understand that whatever you are punishing them for is not allowed because it is dangerous or against your set rules. But for playing around with your little one this type of play spanking can be fun. You can make it be something that happens while you are watching cartoons. They are laying over your lap and you are just patting bottoms and watching tv together.

Heating things up with: Punishment Spankings

By Stephen Richard

Referring to the above paddling review for a second I want to pull out the phrase I want to discuss in some further detail. "Can be a real pain in the butt. A punishing experience for some"

There are times when your little one will push the boundaries and try to see if the rules that you have set for them are real enough for you to enforce them. When this happens you will have to make some choices and one of those things you are going to consider is. How am I going to punish them for breaking the rules that I have set for them?

One of the most obvious choices is a hard punishment spanking. One that will get straight to the point and one that will grab their attention and let them know you mean businesses in regards to the rules that you have setup.

An adult child is no different in their natures than a bio child they will seek to push the boundaries, some will do it because they think its fun to do, some will do it because they think you don't really care. Some will see it as a challenge to see just how far they can go over those rules before you react. There are those who also for some reason or the other just need a good cry to help them release the emotions that all children rather bio or adult children tend to not have a way to deal with.

This of course is a point where you have to decide just how far you are going to let that line you have drawn be breached. Are you going to let them explore their trip behind that line for a bit and let them decide if they want to push further into the areas you have told them were off limits? Are you going to step in as soon as that line is crossed?

The ones who have pushed the limits because they want to see if you really honestly care enough to punish them just as you said you would are not doing it be defiant they are doing it because they honestly need to know if the rules do in fact exist and if you are going to love them enough to honestly punish them just as you said you would do it in the first place.

And while you may feel that maybe you should not punish them but cuddle them so they know that you are there. What they are really needing to know and really looking for us for you to enforce the rules and they want you to punish them.

And the last areas are those who will outright defy you because they know that they can get away with it. Or atleast in their own minds they know they can get away with it. And if you do not react the way you have said you would react they will actually loose some of that respect for you that keeps them from pushing the really big rules. You know those rules they could be no drinking and driving no doing drugs?

Now is the time to react. It is now time to bring them back into line with what you desire to be their place. Not because you love the power but because you love them and you know what is for their best for them.

There are going to be times when a soft spanking just is not going to get the point across, in these times what is needed is a spanking in which they will know you are displeased with how they have acted.

Now you need to do what you said you would do it they break the rules. You need to spank them. They need to have their bottoms bared and put over your knee and spanked. This spanking needs to be hard this spanking needs to get them very quickly to the point they will know that they have displeased you by breaking the rules. They need to be brought to the point of real tears and have a real sting in their bottoms because they did something that you will not accept as being done. They need to be brought to the point of true repentance.

One of the areas mentioned above I want to bring special attention to. The ones who just need a good cry. As adult child there times when stress levels are reaching the point that they are not able to be dealt with naturally by the adult child. These are going to be times when we are the grownups are going to need to recognize that stress level is getting up there and sometimes we will need to do things that will make them cry. Crying is Actually very much a healthy response. We cry because we have something in our eyes and the tears help to wash that away. In this case we sometimes need to help them cry to wash away the things that they are feeling. Those feelings they may not be able to express to us directly but we need to make them cry. It may only take one real hard swat to break open that dam of emotions. Or it make take a real bottom blistering because they have built up so many hard walls against letting go of that stress that its takes a bit to break it And once you have gotten to that point they will let go of the stress. The tears will wash it away from them. We do this because we love them and we care so very much.

Take my adult daughter for example; she works in a very stressful job and in a place where she has peoples lives in her hands daily. That is a huge amount of stress for her, which she sometimes tries to keep buried down deep. But As her daddy I can see that it does build up and if it is not released with my help it will come exploding out. So I seek to try to give her a hard spanking one that will bring her to tears. She of course doesn't want a hard spanking what child does? But I as her daddy knows she needs to let me do this because I can see the stress levels rather she tries to hid them or not. She needs to let me do what I think is needed to help her because if she explodes from the stress she can hurt a lot of people and loose her job.

Daddy's love
By Stephen Richard

Just a short note little princess to let you know that your Daddy's love is:

Forever and ever there for you always loving even when you do bad things.
Stronger than the any pull you will find in your life
Deeper than the oceans that are in the world
Wider then the widest sea
More caring than anyone has ever been
More cuddling than any thing known
More forgiven then most people ever know
Hard on you when you do wrong, but always loving you
Tough at times yet soft as your friends are to you Love that will never end without, and will never change, love that is by all means new and refreshed every day.

Love that will in every way comfort,protect, guide,cherish, remind, hope, strive, push, pull, reach down into the depths, love that can heal the small owies, and the help to make the big owies less hurting, love that will kiss a tear bye when someone is scared, or that will bring a tear when someone needs to know they are loved enough to be guided into the right ways.

Love that would cause a daddy to set in front of a car or bullet, or anything that would try to bring harm to little princess.

Above all else Daddy's love will be the love that surrounds you at all times even when out of my arms of love, the love will cover you much like your special blankey does to bring warmth to you when your sleepy or napping.

Love my little princess is why I do things that you don't understand all the time.
love for you always never ending.

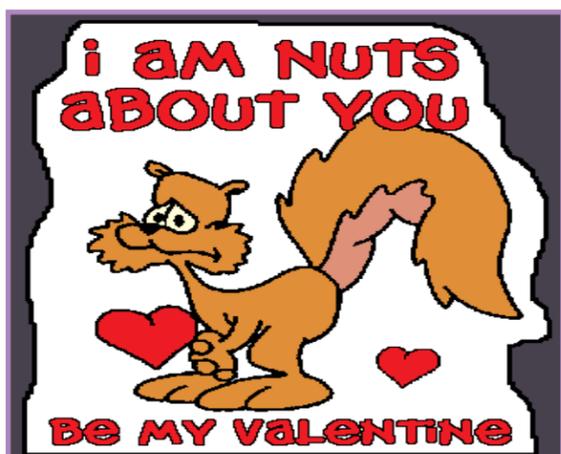

Love that no one can ever take away. even when we are apart.
Not fake love. not some love that only goes half way and then stops when the road gets hard. or that even puts a limit, or says I love you only if you do this, or because you did this I won't love you as much.

Love is not like this upset feelings daddy has, love don't stop, when everything is said.

Love is the road that we both walk on day to day my little princess the road we walk hand and hand. and love is the road that sometimes I carry you because its to hard for a little one to do right now.

Love is all things to all people at all times but to me my little princess

Love is 3 words spoken from the heart, the heart that no one can take away
I love you
Daddy

Can S not lead to *S*

By Stephen Richard

While doing some browsing on the web for everyone's favorite topic of spanking I came across something very interesting. It was a question posted by a college grad. While the whole article was centered around her wanting to be sexy and loved kissing and touching but she didn't want to actually commit to having sex. She had chosen to remain a virgin. Now what brings this into being interesting, is the below question she ask towards the end of her posted question.

There is also a slight complication -- I'm interested in power exchange. I like being dominated. Not in any serious or harmful way, but the idea of spanking turns me on, and I'd like to experiment with that. Do you see the predicament? I'm not a blushing virgin, but I am a virgin, and plan on staying that way for a while.

So I decided I would touch some on this topic as it can and does relate to Age/role-play. Many of our readers and those who are into this life style are in a situation where they want to have the power exchange without the sexual side of the relationship coming into affect.

Many have partners who may not be interested in being their Age play partner but they are still in a relationship with them. This can sometimes be a boyfriend/girlfriend or husband/wife type of relationship. And while both agree it's for the one who is interested in being part of an age/role-play area. The one stipulation that they have is that it cannot be a sexual relationship with the person that they are involved with.

There can also be those for whom age and role-play must simply remain a pure childhood experience. This can be because of past child sexual abuse issues. Or simply a need to keep the head space that they crave a pure relationship without any sex. And for others the age/role they choose to play makes it so that any type of sexual play is not available.

This may be an area in which two friends play together, but choose to keep any of the sexual desires away from the relationship.

Each of these types of relationships are ones in which to include any presence of a sexual relationship would only lead to undermine and ultimately destroy the headspace for both partners involved.

While for many the process of age and role-play can be a very sexually charged experience. And can lead to sexual release either by masturbation or by sexual intercourse, there are those who even the hint or suggestion of such activities only causes them to loose that much sought after headspace.

There is a fine line to be walked on here. And the problem can be finding the right partner. Someone who is just as accepting of the fact that you do not want to have a sexual relationship in your age and role-play experience as they would be if you just wanted to have a one night stand.

Some females would be very quick to leap to the males are not able to say no to sex and that men are just pigs that eat sleep and want sex. There are also some males who would also say that females just lead you on and use you but don't want to give up and spread their legs.

Such Neanderthal beliefs from both sides are the foundations in which sexist people are born and raised in. These men and woman haters as they have become to be called can only see the worst of the opposite sex and to think that someone can rise above their stereotypical views never enters their closed mind.

"Fear not ye virgins ye shall'nt be sacrificed to the gods o lust just yet". There is hope yet that someone somewhere still believes that you can have your cake and eat it to.

What if there was this guy who was married and his wife knew all about his desires to spank someone but she herself could not allow it to happen to her. Do you think she may be able to say if you can find someone to spank and spank only, and have no sexual interactions with then I am fine with you just spanking them.

So let us say that this person finds the woman of his dreams someone who wants to be spanked but has restrictions of no sex. Rather this is a personal choice or a choice based upon mutual understanding by their significant other.

This would be considered a match made in heaven for both. Now both have their cake and can eat it to because for the male he can spank and not have sex and for the female she can get spanked and not have sex.

And in the world today there are still those who believe that chivalry is still alive and well.

Both of these people now have been able to fulfill their desires without breaking their commitments to maintain a sex free life style.

The reasons why someone would want to have a sex free age and role-play lifestyle can vary and would cover anything from past trauma of a sexual nature, such as rape or child abuse on the more harmful end of not wanting to have a sexual relationship in their lifestyle to the more noble making a choice to remain a virgin until they are married.

Either way you look at it. Their choice to keep sex out of their age and role-play relationship can be just as strong as your desire to have sex with them.

What if a single man and a single woman were to have a age and role-play relationship which did not involve sex? Could this not lead to them actually forming a very close relationship? Could this not lead to them falling in love? Could this not lead to them having both a sexual relationship in marriage but still maintaining the no sexual side of things in their age and role-play life style?

Some would consider that to be a statement which is only the things we dream of at night. Others however would say that the statement is the things which their dreams are made of.

The fine line has to be walked very carefully. One of the interesting notes of the article was actually listed before the statement about spanking. That comment reads

I'm not planning on having sex anytime

soon, but I really like kissing and touching.

This of course opens up some interesting areas of the lifestyle in which you can have a touchy feely relationship in your age and role-play lifestyle without hoping into the bed.

No one said there couldn't be some sexual touching even masturbation. Some would call this foreplay. Some could call it a triple without a homerun, some would say you got to third base but you didn't get all the way home.

This is where communication comes into play. We have often in many of our past articles discussed the need to have a very open and honest communication path between you and your partner.

You both have to talk and discuss what you do and do not find acceptable in regards to sexual areas. Do you both think that touching and fondling are ok? Is Oral sex ok? Is mutual masturbation ok? What do you define as sex? Is anal sex still the same? Is using a vibrator sex?

There are many things that you can do without having to actually have sex. There is a point in which a female stops being a virgin. At what point in your communication and understanding of each others needs do you think that this point comes into play?

Keeping the communications coming as to what you are willing to accept and what you are not willing to accept in the form of sexual actions is a very large part of age and role-play.

Some can not have sex while they are feeling little, but when they are feeling grown up they can act like a nymph or rabbit. Some can handle a bit of sexual playing and touching. Some can get into the whole whose your daddy thing.

As with everything the Safe, sane and consensual anthem rings true. If you and your play partner have discussed it, are comfortable with. Then you will know when the timing is right. And you wont need a pill to tell you.

Pervertable??? What is it???

By Stephen Richard

'pervertable' refers to an everyday item (such as a wooden spoon) which is perverted from its original purpose to new and improved use by kinky types (you know dear reader, people like you). Advantages of pervertables are that they're generally cheaper and easier to explain why you would have one.

Here is a list of common pervertable items you could have in your house which you could explain away if you get outed.

- books
  - newspaper, magazine etc. (rolled up)
  - brooms (as stick or also as a birch if made of branches)
  - brushes, especially bath brush, hairbrush and curry comb; both sides may be used if the hairs or spikes are firm to hard carpet beater or rug duster
  - flails
  - pointing stick, ruler and yardstick
  - table tennis paddles, cricket bat and various sports rackets
  - hockey sticks
  - oars
  - pokers
  - ropes, cords and cables (for whipping; also for tying)
  - shaving strap
  - shoes, boots, golf shoes and other cleats and footwear (the plimsoll is a classic)
  - spoon, spatula, whisk, ladle and other cooking utensils such as the cutting board
  - Sweat Scrapers
  - towels (especially wet, to increase the weight)
  - Plant materials such as nettles or certain vines
- Almost any object can be used, barring those too frail or cumbersome. Often the choice is guided by convenience (e.g. availability) or fitting into role play, such as objects associated with various professions or fetishism.
- Other teasing and pain infliction
  - bamboo skewers
  - candles (see wax play)
  - clothes pegs plastic wrap

ice cubes

knives

bandannas as blindfolds or gags snakebite kits (provide suction)

mentholated rubs

feathers or feather dusters (for tickling; the second also as stick)

gloves and oven mitts

lighters, matches, etc.

medical equipment

nails, pins and needles

leather bootlaces, to make an improvised martinet

banjo picks

Ball lock

various tools

edibles, such as whipped cream, peppers, fruits and vegetables, etc.

cooking oils and shortenings (for massaging)

vibrating devices, even as remote as a washing machine especially large, solid objects are also used passively:

to tie the victim onto, e.g. a vaulting horse or vault buck, a sawhorse etc. as an improvised punishment horse, a barrel etc. to be bent over for the victim to lie upon, as chair, table, bed, etc.

rubber bands and other constrictive items

So now you have some ideas on what you can use to spank and punish with and not have to worry about the mother in law asking why you have a paddle or the children holding up a cane that you forgot to put away and asking "Mommy what is this?"

Have fun. Event your own pervetables find things around your house that you can use to spank and punish with. Things that may be within every day reach.

Many of us spanking kinko people love going to the hardware stores, we can find a lot of different things to use there, which we often wonder what could I do with this. And we even try hard to resist the urge of swatting our own hands with it. But in the end the urge wins out.

The following information is taken from the Kinky-Wiki and can be found at http://www.kinky-wiki.com/index.php?title=Age\_Play we take no credit in its wording nor do we claim ownership of its ideas.

General

Ageplay is a form of roleplay in which a person takes on the role of a person who's age is significantly different than their own. Usually this is a physical adult taking on the role of a child. This may be purely non-sexual, or sexual in nature to varying degrees.

While it is common, ageplay does not require a child role. Any time a player takes on a persona of a different age than their own is ageplay. This article will focus on regressive ageplay, but the concepts can often be applied to playing adult roles, such as "barely-legal" teens, or roles much older than the players' own ages, such as a geriatric patient in medical play. Often an age-play scene will involve one person playing a younger persona and another playing an older role (their own age, or an older or younger age than themselves) such as a caretaker or authority figure.

Ageplay is not pedophilia. Ageplay is not sexual contact with real children. While ageplay often involves incest themes, it is not incest. Ageplay is consensual play with one or more adults.

Terminology

AB - Adult Baby, or an ageplayer who plays the role of an infant. Also used are the terms abie, aby, bABy.

ABDL - Refers to adult babies and diaper lovers (see below). Used to refer to these groups as a full community.

Big or Bigperson - Refers to the adult persona of an ageplayer. This is not the term usually used for a caretaker role.

Biokid - A person who is a minor. Used to differentiate between minors and adults playing younger roles.

Diaper Lover - Not technically an ageplay term, but refers to those who fetishize diapers.

Guardian - Any parental or caretaking figure or role.

Innerkid - The child persona of an ageplayer. Abbreviated IK or IC for innerchild. Also used are the plural terms kidz and teenz.

Little - Refers to the child persona of an ageplayer. Sometimes also used to refer to an ageplayer without regard to their current persona.

Littlespace - The ageplay equivalent to headspace or subspace in BDSM play.

Paraphilic Infantilism - the clinical term for adult babies, associated with social or psychological distress.

Ageplay and BDSM

There are many of opportunities for ageplay to overlap with BDSM play. Daddy spansks his little girl, Teacher paddles his student, the scary stranger ties up the little he's abducted, littles playing cops and robbers together pull out the handcuffs, the options go on and on.

One important thing to remember, is that in little space the pain tolerance in many people is drastically different. Just because someone is a masochist usually, does not mean that their 6 year old persona is. Don't be surprised if a spanking that would be mild on an adult mind is much more intense when in a younger mental state.

Ageplay and humiliation play often overlap as well. Forced infantilism (or simply diapering) can be highly effective humiliation play. Kidz can be easily embarrassed, so teasing may be a part of your play.

Finally, a lot of what we do with biobabies and biotoddlers can be seen as bondage, and certainly can overlap with BDSM. Highchairs, cribs and car seats are all made to restrict the movement of small children, and these concepts can be used effectively in an ageplay/bdsm scene. A particularly easy version of this is constructing an adult sized version of the body harness leashes often seen on toddlers.

Ageplay and Gender Play

A very common aspect of ageplay for many is playing cross-gender. Huge numbers of infantilists are men who's infant role is a baby girl. Lots of adult women want to try having sex from the perspective of a 16 year old boy. There is no reason not to combine ageplay with any other kind of role playing you might be into!

Adult roles

A very common aspect of ageplay involves a player taking on the role of an adult caretaker, authority figure, or other adult in contact with an innerkid. Most regressive ageplayers would like to have a caretaker, but those interested in taking on this role are far less common than littles, and therefore in very high demand.

What does a caretaker do? Pretty much whatever their little needs. Often playing a caretaker role allows for a lot of dominance play.

Teenz (puberty to 18)

Teenage sexuality intrigues many people. For most people, our teen years were a time of discovering sexuality, and learning how to have relationships. Teenagers are impulsive, allowing players to role-play activities we might otherwise not do.

Pretty much any play or sexual activity bioteens participate in can be brought into an ageplay scene. Some people remember the thrill of making out in their parents basement, or having sex in the back seat of their boyfriends car. Role playing a full date between teenz, complete with a teenage-market movie, fast food, and a romp in the car can be a lot of fun. Masturbation is a very common aspect of teen roles. "Getting caught" is somewhat cliché, but still fun for many.

Many people also like to play adult/teen or teen/kid scenes. Perhaps your impulsive teenage persona decides to explore sexuality for the first time with her younger brother, or the kid she's babysitting for. Teacher/student scenes are excellent for teen personas.

School-age Kidz (potty-trained to puberty)

For many, the best part of ageplay is getting the chance to do all of the things we wanted to do as children and didn't get to. Another fun aspect is going back to doing those things we did as children and miss getting to do. Do you miss coloring books? Childhood activities, games, and books bring back a pleasant nostalgia for many, and this is for many a huge part of ageplay in the kidz agegroup.

While sexual play is often a part of ageplay in this group, the attitude behind that play is vastly different than in the teenz roles. Here most sexual play is either exploratory (what happens if I do this?) or coerced (mild coercion, abduction scenes, molestation scenes). The exploratory style of play is often gentle, and can be done solo, with a caretaker persona (certainly the most common), or with other littles. Mild coercion play is often similar to exploratory play, with an adult still having some level of interest in the little's enjoyment.

Age ranges can matter significantly. Some players innerkid has a very definite age. Others play within a range of ages, with the behavior and age-concept changing depending on mood. It's generally important not to get too attached to a certain numeric age when first starting to play because you may think your innerkid is 8 years old, only to play for awhile and discover he is closer to 4 or 11. Younger personas tend to require more nurturing, and this kind of play can be a wonderful way to have a caring time with your partner.

Toddlers (walking to potty-training)

It is in this age grouping, kidz who are starting to lack many of the abilities we have as adults. This is where the persona of a caretaker can become very important to many players. Toddlers often wear diapers, use sippy cups instead of glasses, and do not speak in full sentences (and some may not be intelligible at all). For many this self-imposed lack of control is highly attractive. Others crave the sensation of being cared for in a very physical sense. There is much overlap between toddlers and adult babies, the primary difference being in how much the little can do. This agegrouping can be perfect one who is still interested in diapers and intense close care taking, but does not want the heavy restrictions of not being able to feed oneself, walk, or talk.

Sexual play with this age grouping may be very similar to the scenes with kidz, but many players who do like to play with diapers wish to make them a part of their sexual play. The process of diaper changing can be sexual for many.

Adult Babies

Adult babies are certainly the most organized group of ageplayers, but possibly not the largest since there is very little way of knowing how many people participate in ageplay privately. The AB community is organized, but still small enough that there are not very many official groups in the way that BDSM players or furies tend to group. Those groups that do exist are within larger cities or metropolitan areas. Most AB resources (groups, websites, etc) also welcome other ageplayers and diaper fetishists as well. More than 90% of adult babies are men. More than half of those self identify as heterosexual, the remainder being mostly homosexual, with a small number identifying as bisexual. A significant number (At least one in four, possibly more) of adult babies also participate in cross-dressing, and play out the role of a baby girl. The term used for these babies is "sissy-baby." They are definitely as accepted by the AB community as much as any other AB. A small but visible number of adult babies are also furies, and will use the term "babyfur." Yes, sissy-babyfurs do exist.

Adult baby play is less likely to be sexual than other forms of ageplay, but sexual diaper play (in which the diapered players do not assume an AB role) is common. AB play can be an effective way of providing a sense of love, safety, and comfort. It can also be effectively used as aftercare.

Safety in playing

By Stephen Richard

I cannot stress enough the need for safety in playing (Playing meaning anything dealing with Role-play) with someone either online or in Real Life

The guiding rules of all Relationships should follow this guideline

1. Safe: Never do anything that could bring long lasting or serious bodily harm to anyone.
2. Sane: Edge play with objects such as knives, guns, hanging etc, can lead to serious trouble or harm. It must be practiced with GREAT care and every Ounce of safety taken into account. An ounce of safety will keep you healthy wealthy and alive.

3. Consensual: ALWAYS talk with your partner to know what they will and will not allow. Think of it like this. If you are hanging from a 2nd story window of a burning building. Are you going to TRUST the firefighter to catch you? You have to TRUST your partner will never do anything to hurt you.

When Meeting in Real life, there are some common sense rules we always forget to think about until it's too late. Remember folks having hindsight that is 20/20 can be too late if you have already been hurt.

Some ideas when meeting someone in Real life for the first time:

1. Always meet in a public place a mall or a restaurant.
2. Always take a friend whom you have great trust in with you
3. If you go alone make sure you tell someone where you are going and give him or her all the important info you can. Place you will meet, phone numbers etc etc.
4. Do not allow yourself to be pressured into playing right away, talk with the person and get to really know them.

5. Never have someone meet you at your house or allow them to drive or follow you to your house.

6. Do not give out your telephone number to anyone whom you have not been totally sure are safe to talk to, any good person with a computer can use www.411.com and type in your phone number and get your whole address try it sometime folks you may be surprised.

7. Always use a safe word; even the closets of partners can have a bad day. Sorry girls but this is one you may not like but many can say its the truth PMS does affect your limits and your ability to keep things safe and sane. Safe words should be a word you wouldn't normally use. No is not a good word to use why? Because what if your partner thinks you are just acting like you don't want to be punished in the role? Red light is a good one, calling the person by their REAL first name.

8. While some find being gagged to be a good thing personally I find it to be very dangerous. You cant use your safe word when you cant talk now can you? Objects in the mouth can also cause you to not be able to breath properly.

9. When you are looking to hire someone for a job you check their references, what is wrong with checking the references of the ones you are going to play with Rather they be The Dom or the sub (terms can be meaning Top or bottom as well)

10. Never assume just because a person says they will stop that they will.

Let me tell you a little story to go in with #10 a good friend of mine met this Dom. he started spanking her with a paddle. Hard enough to eventually cause blood to start flowing. She was black from the top of her bottom to her legs. She tried to get the Dom to stop he wouldn't, Why? He said this wasn't play this was punishment. Folks that person is now afraid of any type of wooden toy being used. All because the Dom wouldn't keep HER limits.

Just because you are a Dom does NOT ever give you the right to assume you can do what you want to. Remember the golden rule "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

If you as the Dom or top or whatever term you want to use wouldn't want someone to beat you till you have bad bruises or are bleeding or are scared then by George you best think about that person your about ready to do the same to right?
